Individual Variation

Text A

Text A is an extract from the unpublished memoir 'Dear Toby' in which Adam Weighell discusses his experience of becoming the father of Toby, a premature baby.

Chapter 3 – Bonding!

No parent will forget the first time they hold their baby, it's emblazoned in their mind like Harry Potter's lightning bolt scar on his forehead. There are 2 exceptions to this rule, you are either a Jellyfish (they don't have hearts or brains) or you are yet to hold yours. Most will claim it's a life changing moment, overcome with feelings of love: "You are my world" will be mandatorily posted on social media. I'm sure it's a Facebook feature. Sadly this moment for parents of neonates, especially those in NICU, is wildly different. You may not be able to hold them for hours, days or even weeks.

Before we get to those unforgettable first cuddles, I need to clear something up. Parents either have an irrational belief that their baby is beautiful or are just good liars. Most babies are born ugly. Fact. The face is swollen, the skin is bruised and the features all look a bit distorted. Babies grow into their faces – well most of them.

When the moment comes to lift your child triumphantly, like Rafiki holding Simba high on Pride Rock, an overwhelming feeling of love will probably be replaced with an irrepressible dose of fear. It's perfectly normal. The prospect of picking up a poorly baby who is being kept alive by a perplexing amount of space age machinery is petrifying at first. The whole process WILL BE incredibly nerve-wracking, you will struggle to relax. I spent most of the first hour holding Toby as if he were a bomb. Thankfully, the bomb disposal experts (the nursing team) defused Toby, and my fears, safely.

Convention dictates that you should love your baby on seeing them for the first time and you must be head over heels the first time you hold them. This is NOT TRUE! Regardless of being a parent of a neonate, love isn't a switch that you flick, it may take time. For the parent of a neonate or sick baby it is incredibly tough to instantly fall in love with something that might not be with you tomorrow.

Do try to let your guard down and allow yourself to be smitten. I wish I had earlier on our journey. In the beginning I was rooting for a tiny baby that I was unable to hold, feed or take home. We were terrified that we'd receive a telephone call informing us that he had no fight left. As a result, I forbid myself to love him. I refused to touch him for weeks, genuinely scared that I'd hurt him. In a way, this self-defence mechanism helped me withstand the torturous early days, it shielded me from breaking down. Looking back, this was wrong. I should have got stuck in from the moment he was born, touched him, caressed him and held him as much as I could. The more I bonded with Toby the more "he became my world" (Urggghhh), in less sickening terms, it helped me to fall in love with him. Seize every opportunity to have cuddles. It helps both parents and preemie, not just while you are in hospital, these bonding sessions are linked to reduced stress later on in life.

PS when holding your sultana sized child, make sure you support the neck by gently cupping the back of it. If you don't it might snap! I'm not sure if this is technically correct, but it will help the baby.

Variation over Time

Text C

Text C is an extract from Thomas Gisborne's book 'An Enquiry into the Duties of the Female Sex' published in 1797.

There is a prejudice which it is desirable to remove without delay, because it is found to exist in female minds, and unavoidably contributes, in proportion to its strength, to extinguish the desire of improvement, and to repress useful exertion. The fact is this. Young women endowed with good understandings, but desirous of justifying the mental indolence which they have permitted themselves to indulge; or disappointed at not perceiving a way open by which they, like their brothers, may distinguish themselves and rise to eminence; are occasionally heard to declare their opinion, that the sphere in which women are destined to move is so humble and so limited, as neither to require nor to reward assiduity; and under this impression, either do not discern, or will not be persuaded to consider, the real and deeply interesting effects which the conduct of their sex will always have on the happiness of society.

Human happiness is on the whole much less affected by great unfrequent events, whether of prosperity or of adversity, of benefit or of injury, than by small but perpetually recurring incidents of good or evil. The manner in which the influence of the female character is felt belongs to the latter description. It is not like the periodical inundation of a river, which overspreads once in a year a desert with transient plenty. It is like the dew of heaven which descends at all seasons, returns after short intervals, and permanently nourishes every herb of the field.

In three particulars, each of which is of extreme and never-ceasing concern to the welfare of mankind, the effect of the female character is most important.

First, In contributing daily and hourly to the comfort of husbands, of parents, of brothers and sisters, and of other relations, connections, and friends, in the intercourse of domestic life, under every vicissitude of sickness and health, of joy and affliction.

Secondly, In forming and improving the general manners, dispositions, and conduct of the other sex, by society and example.

Thirdly, In modelling the human mind during the early stages of its growth, and fixing, while it is yet ductile, its growing principles of action; children of each sex being, in general, under maternal tuition during their childhood, and girls until they become women.

Glossary

indolence – a state of laziness

assiduity – attention to detail

vicissitude – an unwelcome change of circumstance or fortune

ductile – flexible
