Source B

Adapted from a statement issued by Neville Chamberlain and Adolf Hitler following the signing of the Munich Agreement, in September 1938.

We, the German Chancellor and British Prime Minister, have met again and agreed that the relationship between our countries is most important both for ourselves and Europe. The Anglo-German Naval Agreement of 1935 and the successful Munich conference show our countries' desire to avoid war between us. We are determined that talking shall be the way of solving any issues concerning our two countries.
